Heuristic Evaluation……...…… 2

Violations in Proposed Design	Problem and Solution (italicized)	Heuristic Violated	Severity (0 to 5 scale, where 5 is most severe)
	The calendar, date and time input mechanism is confusing, unintuitive and disorganized. A more intuitive design like a slider would be better to filter date and time, which could just be on the map itself. The interests could be edited separately, in its own place.	Flexibility and Efficiency of use. Aesthetics and Minimalist Design. Consistency and Standards. Visibility of System Status.	5
	The heart button is confusing and unresponsive. Does it mean liking the event, or joining it? How do you know you have joined the event if it doesn't respond? It is unclear to the user what the arrow in the top right corner is supposed to do. The heart could be made into a "plus" or "add" sign, which meets standards of other apps, and hence would be more intuitive. The right arrow, could be a "read more" button.	Consistency and Standards. Visibility of System Status.	5

 	The search feature on the map takes you to a new page, which is inefficient. Also, it is not immediately clear if your search has worked. A drop-down search feature on the map page itself would be more efficient, with different colors for recent searches and recommendations (like Google Search).	Flexibility and Efficiency of use. Aesthetics and Minimalist Design. Consistency and Standards. Visibility of System Status.	5
	The groups listed are not clickable, so the user cannot view the club info when he/she wants to. Instead the user must go to the map, search for the club and then click on the map icon, all just to view club info. Only deletion is possible, and since the deletion button is so big, and there is no “Confirm Deletion” popup, it is prone to deleting by mistake.	Flexibility and Efficiency of use. Error Prevention.	4

	Make the list of clubs clickable taking the user to the club's main page. The delete button should be moved to the club's main page too, with a popup to confirm delete.
	The club's main page has only the general meeting times and upcoming events. There is no information on what the club is about, their president, etc. For this, the user must click on the URL to view their official website. While the user is search for a club to join, the meetings and upcoming events aren't of much use. And the club has to make a seperate website, which not all clubs can do and extra work for the clubs (inefficient). The club main page should have all of its information that a club website would have. So there would be not much reason to have a separate website.	Flexibility and Efficiency of use.	3
